Portfolio performance review

The 4D Global Infrastructure Fund (Unhedged) was down a net 0.61% net (AUD) in January 2024, under-performing the benchmark's return of 0.52% (by 1.13%) and the FTSE 50/50 Infrastructure Index which was up 0.70% (AUD). Currency contributed 203bps to performance in January.

The strongest performer for January was Spanish diversified group, Ferrovial up 7.2% for the month. Investors were optimistic ahead of its Capital Markets Day on 1st February and hopeful for news about the much anticipated US listing, targeted for Q1. While the CMD proved to be a little disappointing - more an information session than a strategic update, nothing derailed the story, and the stock remains well supported.

The weakest performer in January was Chinese gas distributor, China Resources Gas down 13.7% as news around the Chinese property sector continues to disappoint. This is relevant for CRG's new connections and while an overhang has been more than priced in.

Markets remain volatile on the outlook for inflation, interest rates and economic growth. Most developed market Central Banks are at peak policy rates, with market expectations of aggressive rate cuts in 2024. Inflation continues to ease, but the delayed impact of high interest rates on economic growth is yet to fully be seen. There remains a fine balancing act between holding rates in restrictive territory too long and hitting activity – and loosening too quickly before inflation is sustainably within target ranges. Listed infrastructure, as an asset class, fundamentally can do well in either scenario - with explicit or implicit inflation hedges and long-term predictable earnings profiles underpinned by contract or regulation.

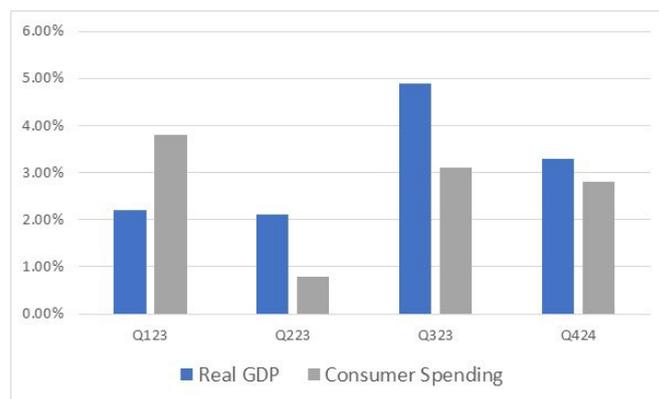

Month in review

Markets continued to grind higher in January, buoyed by continued strength in US economic data, with MSCI World (Local) up 1.23% in January, and the S&P 500 up 1.68% hitting all-time highs. Whilst bond yields ended flat for the month at 3.91% (US ten years), they had a 25bps intra-month range and continue to be volatile as the market digests both the timing of the first Fed rate cut and the magnitude of 2024 rate cuts.

US economic data continues to be robust and surprise to the upside. Retail sales (core control group) were very strong in December, rising 0.8% vs 0.2% consensus. The economy expanded more than expected, up 3.3% QoQ in Q4 vs 2% consensus and a very strong 4.9% Q3, boosted by a resilient consumer which grew at 2.8% and above trend. The Fed's preferred CPI reading, the core personal consumption expenditures (PCE) deflator, came in below expectations at 2.9% YoY in December, below 3% for the first time since March 2021.

In the UK, inflation surprised to the upside in December with core +5.1% YoY vs consensus of 4.9%, which pushed back the market's expectations for rate cuts this year.

Geopolitics will continue to be a key market driver in 2024. In January we saw election results in Taiwan's presidential election which should lead to no major foreign policy changes with China, as the incumbent party stayed in power but lost their majority. Tensions also remain heightened in the Middle East with further attacks on shipping tankers in the Red Sea. This has led to a spike in global shipping rates, particularly from Asia to Europe – which have doubled this year but are still less than half of their Covid peaks. This has had a limited impact so far for global inflation, but impacts Europe more than the US and will become a bigger risk as elevated shipping rates drag on and are passed on to consumers.

In Europe, Germany continues to be weak. European services PMI fell to 48.4 (contracting), banks continue to tighten lending standards and consumer confidence was lower than expected. ECB's Lagarde continues to push back market pricing of rate cuts – saying they are likely in the European summer whilst the market is pricing in April cuts.

MSCI China was down 10.5% in January as the market digested continued property market weakness and incremental stimulus measures to try and turn investor sentiment. Broadly in December, fixed asset investments and factory output were better – whilst retail sales were slow and financing, home prices and sales were lower month on month. Chinese GDP in Q4 was lighter than expected, growing 1% QoQ from 1.5% in Q3. In late January, China cut the reserve requirement ratio 50bps in a surprise move which injected up to $1trn yuan into the economy. Policies were also announced to support real estate developers by broadening the use of new commercial loans.
